The House of Representatives passed the bill in a vote of 71-26 — over half of the lawmakers who voted supported the bill. Its next stop is the Republican-controlled Senate. The state Air Pollution Control Authority says carbon-capturing biomass plants can reduce air pollution and fossil fuel use and slow climate change, but they're costly and don't yet exist in sufficient numbers to meet climate change goals. Supporters of the bill say it would make it easier for biomass or biogas power plants that use large amounts of wood chips or other biomass to come online faster. Some of the biggest opponents were the timber industry. They argued that the bill would increase forest-related deaths and weaken environmental protections.

Re: NEW FANTASY ACTION RPG [95] - Starting from 00:05 - 4th November 2016 Sorry for the short notice. Cheering up on the International Guitar Day, we bring a look at upcoming and updated content in the new Fantasy action RPG, Tarnished. Tarnished is an action RPG in which players arise from the wreckage and the bullets of a revolution, and explore a vast wilderness and defend a town along with their party. A player can upgrade characters by enhancing their physical strength to become stronger warriors, and develop their magic abilities to fight the enemies with various card types and unique strategies.

The "Enough for the World" event that lasts until the end of the month features a variety of new content, including a special event, such as masteries that can carry different attributes, a new card type that will be used to improve your cards, and the start of a new quest.]

I'm trying to figure out what ICMP does, so I'm reading this: The first question is why does ping do a broadcast? Why wouldn't it just send a message directly to the destination computer? Secondly, why does it do it from UDP? Doesn't it do the broadcast from the source? Thirdly, is it just a waste of CPU cycles? It seems like a lot of ICMP packets could be handled with a single network packet, right? In summary, my questions are: Why does a ping do a broadcast? Why does it do it from UDP? Why doesn't it do it from the source instead? A: The ICMP messages are part of TCP/IP protocol. The ICMP messages are not transported directly over the network, instead they are encapsulated into the TCP/IP network packet (or are received as a part of a TCP/IP-initiated session). As stated in the text, it is like the same question why does a router do a broadcast. As you might know, a router relies on the IP datagrams, although in some cases it may become necessary to do a broadcast. Moreover, not only the ICMP messages are encapsulated into the TCP/IP network packets, but also the IP datagrams encapsulated into the TCP/IP packet. So, it is a bit like the basic IP datagrams through the network ethernet frame. Sliding window In computer science, a sliding window (also known as a moving window or sliding aggregate) is a computational method where a fixed window remains constantly moving while a contiguous section of a larger sequence is analysed and aggregated with it. It was first used by statistician William H. McCune to describe a method for finding the mean of a set of data samples. The procedure is used to reduce the computational burden of finding a value that is a total. Comparison to other aggregation methods The computational burden of selecting a value that is a total can be contrasted with the problem of aggregating a variable $x_1,...,x_N$, where each of the
