There are no private offices, and the only kind of doors are those that open into shared spaces. There are no closed doors, and all open spaces are exposed to the elements and have a clear view to and from the street. The shared spaces, in turn, are accessible from both inside and outside of the building. As a result of these design principles, the building has a noticeably open feeling that arises from the open structure. This allows for cross-pollination and shared expertise, and it creates a more egalitarian atmosphere in the workplace. The outside space where the offices are located is the same space where the workers eat, cook, do laundry, enjoy free drinks and relax. The building is not reliant on a fixed address, so it is easy to move employees to a new office in the building, if necessary, thereby creating a new structure that follows the same design principles. However, the original structure can also be maintained as the headquarters of the company. The building is also in line with the project's aim to re-engineer the way we work. The company recognises that our current workplace is not conducive to producing the best work, and that creativity is undermined by a proliferation of limits and rules. The building's shape also differentiates it from a traditional office

Optical Dispersion Compensation Using a Dual-Tube Polarization-Independent Add-Drop Method in Photonic Crystal Fiber Based on the Unidirectional Multiple-Traversal-Point Coupler Principle. We experimentally demonstrate an add-drop method utilizing a dual-tube polarization-independent fiber Bragg grating (FBG) structure, in which the photonic power transfer at the two wavelengths (λ_1 and λ_2) is linearly independent and controlled independently. A fiber Bragg grating is introduced into a polarization maintaining (PM) fiber, which has three beams in the transmission spectral peak position; two are required to determine the dispersion and are symmetric with respect to the peak center. A fiber Bragg grating-based add-drop filter (APDF) is demonstrated and is based on the unidirectional multiple-traversal-point coupler principle. The two symmetric beams of the fiber Bragg grating are utilized as the wavelength add and drop channels. Simulation and experiments on the add and drop characteristics are provided. The insertion loss at the add/drop wavelength range is Robbie Way Robert 'Robbie' James Way (born 23 September 1990) is an English football player for West Bromwich Albion. He began his career as a trainee with Manchester United.
