downloadToxicity of toluene diisocyanate and lignocaine nasal spray as compared to lidocaine spray in guinea pigs. The comparative neurotoxicity of toluene diisocyanate (TDI) and lignocaine was compared in male albino guinea pigs. TDI was given in a single dose of 100 mg/kg, and lignocaine in single doses of 5, 10, and 25 mg/kg as nasal sprays, the solutions being sprayed intradermally on each side of the neck. Bupivacaine 0.5% was used as the control drug. The incidence of anesthesia and the time to return to the horizontal position were recorded. A satisfactory degree of anesthesia was obtained in 67% of the animals given TDI, and in only 16% of the animals given bupivacaine. The time to return to the horizontal position was significantly longer in the animals given TDI than in the animals given bupivacaine (P less than 0.05). Animals given lignocaine had the same degree of anesthesia, and the time to return to the horizontal position was comparable to that in animals given bupivacaine. The data suggest that TDI may be more toxic than lignocaine.)

Half-life: 1.28 ± 0.02 s (200 keVee) Nuclear isomer The ^{155}Gd nucleus is an isomer of ^{151}Gd . The nucleus is 4 m from the ground state, and the isomeric form has a positive parity (laboratory frame), similar to that of the known isomer ^{151}Eu . However, the beta-decay of ^{155}Gd does not correspond to emission of one electron or a negative parity, and hence the isomer is not an electron-capture isomer. Overview of isomeric properties Following are the characteristics and properties of the isomeric states of ^{151}Eu and ^{155}Gd : Energy: ^{151}Eu with isomer = +0.05 MeV (0.15 eV) and ^{155}Gd with isomer = +2.05 MeV (4.49 eV) from the ground state. Parity: + (electron capture for ^{151}Eu and beta decay for ^{155}Gd) Log ft: ^{151}Eu with isomer = -8.34, ^{155}Gd with isomer = -8.35 Zero point vibrational energy: ^{151}Eu with isomer = 1.70 meV and ^{155}Gd with isomer = 0.12 meV Excited state minima energy (cm): ^{151}Eu with isomer = 356.1 cm^{-1} , ^{155}Gd with isomer = 359.9 cm^{-1} Energy separation from ground state minima: ^{151}Eu with isomer = 0.6 meV, and ^{155}Gd with isomer = 1.7 meV Energy separation from ground state vibrational energy maxima: ^{151}Eu with isomer = 9.6 meV, and ^{155}Gd with isomer = 16.3 meV Energy separation from ground state rotational energy maxima: ^{151}Eu with isomer = 14.0 me published in 1927, this slim volume is a worthy companion to these early images of Java and its people. It is a rare example of the post-World War I fascination with this eastern world that was still largely unknown. ii) Description: This book is made of two parts. The first one consists of the first eight chapters (1-8) covers the history of Java especially the material and cultural history while the second one (chap. 9-16) covers the natural, human and cultural history of Java. This book can be used as a book for classroom study and be used as a guidebook, as a historical source for students and scholars. Three chapters have been specially written for Kala tarawa series readers to expand the information on the history of Java.
