A$AP Rocky spent his teenage years selling cannabis and crack while moving .Q: How to reset/free the memory space of an object in Java? I have two classes, one creates an object, and one keeps track of that object's state (that is, which objects have been created by the same "creator"). I want to create a button that will reset all objects so that they're released. I'm not quite sure what the best approach to this would be, especially since I need to "free" all the objects, and I don't really want to just call their destructors. I thought about using a Map to store each object's creator, but this is a class I found on Oracle's website (this came up first as part of their SOAP examples), and it didn't make much sense to me. That example wasn't great either because it had to read from the File object every time an object was created, and that's not how the memory should be managed (that's how you end up with the Pool object's leak). If anyone has any ideas
