- so non-spatial (so for that aspect i do understand that) Quote: they are forced to move away from their breeding waters due to the depth of the ice(not much, can't really tell how deep, from one read) Quote: Minimum survival temperature - any sub-arctic large shallow sea ice pack - any size and/or depth Shallow - good one this one. This means that, as the ice pack declines, the minimum temperature that the species can stay, depends on the depth of the sea ice. Having said all this, i'm not sure what happenes if the ice pack declines at a rapid enough rate (that i'm not sure for sure if that's what is happenning). That's pretty much it. I'll be cedding to the second bottle on two of the above points, but otherwise i've been mostly decieving myself with lies and whatever of the others statements. So where can i find sparsne's sites? Can you tell for sure if i'm thinking about it right? I don't want to hurt his feelings (though i doubt he'd be shocked but who knows). Quote: How big? Grayling are a small water fish, 100-150mm above the icefloe. Every year (ish) they simply are back for another cycle. I think they are cold-loving fish and prefer the icefloe over the open water. Yeah, at that size, it's probable they have some pretty large freeze pockets I think i've narrowed my choices down. Having got a few more results, i'm leaning more towards sea ice with minimum depths of about 1.5-2m. I could be wrong, but I don't think you can have too many layers of cold water on top of each other, because of gradients (not the layers of cold, but the gradients of the temperature and salinity. It's sort of like the 'plates moving against eachother in the ocean'. If they don't move or break, then you get'steps' or other abrupt changes in the water density. You should add to your list, however, that if the min temperature difference between the bottom of the stratification and the surface is greater than 4, the layers get mixed all up together at the top. Tipping Point is a high-quality point-and-click adventure game where you must find out who is the "ultimate criminal" behind a mysterious hotel takeover. The game is designed with a light puzzle tone that will appeal to fans of the adventure genre. Story You wake up one morning in your hotel room to find your cash wallet missing. You can see a suspicious man peeking through the keyhole, but you are too tired to chase him. You check out and head to the neighboring hotel. Upon entering, you get a call from the manager, who tells you that the hotel is now under the control of a mysterious criminal organization. You can't get the manager to tell you anything else. Suddenly, the manager shows up in your room demanding to talk to you. He tells you that he needs to deliver an important message to you, and he will return later. You explore the hotel room and find a map. You find an exit to a garage, and head outside. You meet a maid who informs you that a woman called Mrs. Stein was supposed to arrive a few minutes ago. You turn to leave but she stops you. Mrs. Stein says to you that you look very familiar and ask you if you remember her. As you look around you realize that all the people in the hotel have the same eerily familiar faces, like yourself. Once Mrs. Stein leaves, you contact your lawyer to get a divorce, but she asks if you can meet with her that evening. You wonder if she has something to do with all this, and you decide to follow her. You get a phone call from a friend of yours named Eddie who can't go to a dinner tonight because the guy he is meeting is sick, and you need to go in his place. On your way to the restaurant, you meet a stranger. He tells you that he can help you, as he was scheduled to be killed by the criminals. He tells you to get to the airport soon as possible to meet him. You can't tell Eddie about this, as he is still in the restaurant and he doesn't want to be involved. You get to the airport and meet the guy. He instructs you to take a taxi to a house just off the pier. You don't realize that you are not alone. You are being followed. You follow the stranger and discover that the house belongs to the criminal group, and the game will be over if you can't figure out how to close the door from the outside. You
