* The Snack Gallery (Mac) or Pixelmator (Windows) are clones that work with Photoshop's flat, stacked layers. * Pixlr Editor (Mac) and Paint.Net (Windows) are online site editors that work with Photoshop's flat, stacked layers. _Note:_ You can find more online editing suites in Chapter 8. # Filters The Filters tool, accessed by clicking Filter Filter, enables quick access to a slew of different filters that you can use to enhance your images. Photoshop comes with a variety of built-in filters you can use, but you can also find ready-made filters on the Internet or download them from Photoshop's website for free. The filters are arranged in tabs near the top of the Filter window. However, if you prefer, you can easily rearrange the tabs by dragging the tab headings to the left or to the right of the window. You can also resize the Filter window by dragging the window border. When you click the Filter Filter button, Photoshop displays the Filters panel, which is shown in Figure 5-9. The Filters panel is divided into a number of tabs, each one devoted to a different filter. You can see in Figure 5-9 that the panel in this example is set to use the Graduated Filter and that a number of filters are selected: Figure 5-9 Use the Filters panel to apply different filters to your images. This panel is also divided into different tabs. The top tab is the Graduated Filter tab, the second tab is the Details tab, and the third tab is the Filter Gallery. The details tab includes all the settings you would use to select which filters you want to use. ## Graduated Filter The Graduated Filter, as you might expect, creates a visual effect by using gradients, which are lines that change from one color to another. Graduated filters typically create a soft transition between two colors. The Graduated

Filter is found in the Filter Gallery and the Details panel. The Graduated Filter works like a filter if you move a slider, but you use the Graduated Filter with the Brush tool. Figure 5-10 illustrates how to use the Graduated Filter. Figure 5-10 Using the Graduated Filter with the Brush tool Click the small triangle pointing to the right of the Filters panel,

As we reported earlier this month, Google Maps will be rolling out a way to manage your Google Contacts in Google Drive as well. Now that it's here, it is similar to how you can manage Google Contacts from the Google app on iOS and Android. To add a Google contact, tap on the menu icon at the top of your contacts view. You will then be prompted to either import contacts or sync contacts from Google. I'm excited to see how this turns out, as I think it will be really nice to be able to manage your contacts in the exact same location regardless of which device you're using, instead of having to sync or sync again when you're switching between the apps. I'm curious to see how the setup will work and how robust the system is.{ "images": [{ "filename": "ic_rotation_lock_24pt.png", "idiom": "universal", "scale": "1x" }, { "filename": "ic_rotation_lock_24pt_2x.png", "idiom": "universal", "scale": "2x" }, { "filename": "ic_rotation_lock_24pt_3x.png", "idiom": "universal", "scale": "3x" }], "info": { "author": "xcode", "version": 1 } } Tim Lake, YouTube fame (official) Twitter Alert 1 year ago Last week, I got this from a friend: "Would
