Stress testing; improved mortality prediction using a refined definition of the endpoint. The EuroSCORE is the most widely used tool for predicting short- and long-term mortality in patients undergoing major elective cardiac surgery. Although the overall predictive value of the EuroSCORE has been validated, its use has been criticized because it fails to properly weigh the risk of in-hospital mortality. The purpose of this study was to determine whether risk stratification of postoperative mortality could be improved by analyzing the endpoint in more detail. A retrospective database analysis. University hospital. From January 1, 1999, to December 31, 2000, 688 consecutive patients undergoing elective cardiac surgery. Our dataset included 493 (72%) patients who received the original EuroSCORE and 205 (28%) who received a modified EuroSCORE. The patient characteristics and risk factors were comparable between the two study groups. A stratified analysis of in-hospital and 30-day mortality was performed. At a constant mortality rate of 10%, risk stratification with the original EuroSCORE identified 53.4% of patients as low risk, 15.2% as intermediate risk, and 31.4% as high risk. With the refined EuroSCORE, 78% of patients were classified as low risk, 8% as intermediate risk, and 14% as high risk. Four risk factors were the only significant predictors of in-hospital mortality in the refined EuroSCORE. The original EuroSCORE performed poorly when studied with a refined endpoint. In more complex analyses, it is able to identify some patients at high risk of mortality, whereas in other analyses it is unable to differentiate between patients with intermediate risk of mortality. Therefore, our study supports the use of the refined EuroSCORE, as this strategy is able to predict some but not all cases of in-hospital mortality. Friday, August 7, 2011 Progress Report: 48th Post I will say this, you guys have been really patient with this. We are still a little bit away from a finished project, and I don't want to rush anything because I think it would be a disservice to the player base. As a side note, today will be the first time we haven't been able to post a bit from home. This is going to be our 'office' work schedule for the next 8-10 weeks. So, the next blog will be in the office. With all this talk about modding, how does one become a modder? Well, that's where Steam Workshop comes in. I have a flex datagrid and I would like to know how to get the selected row (i.e. what item in the array does the selected row reference) A: There isn't really an easy way to do this. You can easily get the selected item by using the `getSelectedItem` method on the `Items` component. The item reference is then passed into `getSelectedObject`. With selected object you can find the selected row by doing something like this: `var selectedRow : Object = grid.getSelectedItem(); trace("selected row:" + selectedRow); trace("row items:" + grid.viewSource.selectedObject.rowItems);` Pursuit of Healthier Living Category: Health & Fitness Although it is true that the news report is mostly dominated by news about negative aspects, there is also a lot of news about people that are living longer.
