Every two months we roll out new crack files to help our users with. 15 November 2007 Â· Subject: [ZDNet] Enigma re-releases Enigma 6.0.2 with an. the Enigma ProtectorÂ .About 50 percent of applications made in the past four years by Americans for U.S. citizenship have been filed from within the Department of Homeland Security's executive branch. Seeking U.S. citizenship to avoid deportation, or to access "specialized services" that might otherwise be unavailable, are the most common reasons given in the nine-page survey of thousands of such applications, which were requested by The Washington Times. Nineteen percent of respondents noted financial reasons as their reason for seeking U.S. citizenship. About 15 percent of the applications, meanwhile, came from a legal status that would have expired during the year they filed. Almost all the applications came from holders of legal resident alien or temporary worker status. Other reasons for such applications: □ Seeking to avoid expatriation, the term used to describe the process by which an American leaves or is forced to leave the country voluntarily. □ Asylum for fear of deportation. □ To access programs such as the U.S. armed forces, federal crime fighting and agricultural programs. □ To attend schools for children with special needs. □ The children of U.S. citizens, or of immigrants who are not eligible for special services. The 9/11 Commission has found, as The Times previously has reported, that the Sept. 11, 2001, hijackers came from 15 countries, although only five were on immigration watch lists. Of the two hijackers with full U.S. passports, only one, Hani Hanjour, was on the U.S. watch list. Investigators have not determined how the other hijacker, Khalid al-Mihdhar, obtained a U.S. passport, although al-Mihdhar later was found in Saudi Arabia. The popular series "How I Met Your Mother" dealt with the issue of identity theft in a 2008 episode and how the mother hid her identity for six years. The episode was based on events that happened to a real person. Parents who supply fake documents for children or for themselves are subject to fines and even federal prison. "It's a huge problem right now," said George Milstead
