Twitter has suspended a pro-Trump troll army known as "God Emperor" Trump," blaming its decision on a failure to observe its rules against abusive behavior and threats of violence. The account, which has more than 200,000 followers, posted threats of physical violence against celebrities, including Hillary Clinton, that "most if not all" have since been deleted. The crackdown comes as Twitter appears to be cracking down on some but not all accounts of far-right influencers. Milo Yiannopoulos, who once had more than 400,000 followers, has been suspended and many of his accounts recently have been shuttered. A Twitter support staffer told McClatchy that the company had a problem with the God Emperor Trump account. "We've shut down hundreds of Twitter accounts for this behavior in the last year," he said. The staff member didn't provide any further information about the account, including the reason for the suspension. The God Emperor Twitter account was suspended in September, according to a cached version of the profile, which was last active on Oct. 21. The account still has nearly 5,000 followers, more than 3,600 of which were "POTUS," or President of the United States. The account is the work of James O'Keefe, the far-right activist best known for his highly-publicized 2017 videos that allegedly involved Republican congressional staffers talking about procedures for handling Freedom of Information Act requests. O'Keefe has backed Donald Trump since the beginning, when he ran as the Reform Party's presidential candidate in c6a93da74d
