THOSE "STORIES", DO MOUNTAINS RISE "OVERBOARS"? Can Sibel Barut "interpret" the meanings of "Tales"? The Light of the Stars is a series of prayers, (called "numerologie" by, say the Buddhists) that is composed "of the syllables of the names of the Enlightened Ones", (the Special Accomplishment of the Mystic Order). It is an attempt to harmonize the consciousness with the "vast and infinite space" "of the Absolute", through "analysis and interpretation" in precise language. It can be considered a kind of Liturgy or prayer to the Absolute. It has been compiled from a variety of sources in many different languages, from the oldest-known work of meditation "The Yoga of Perfection", to "hymical formulae", such as the "Royal Fire" found in the "Chymical Marriage of Christian Rosenkreutz" to the 19th-century "Pythagorean Society", and into modern documents like F. Evans and A.S. Moore (1953), Schuon, (1959). It has its roots "in the abundant literature of the history of religions", which are its primary source and "source book". The text is quite long, and includes, in addition to a short introduction, 14 chapters, and a large number of "Noten", "Zyme", and "Stich" (Notes, Text, and Explanation). Many of the "sagas" in the text are specially "indi", and work to further the individual's "Siddhis", or Psychic Powers. It is an attempt to strip away the "anatastrophism" of the "passivity" "of the passive "observer," and to take a corrective "standpoint", through the "epiphany" "of the dream" "of collective consciousness". In the tradition of "Western mysticism" and "Esotericism", it can be considered as a "Bible", a text that guides one to "God-realization", although it also calls for "afterthought" and reflection upon the "activities" of the imagination's "phantasy". You have to realize that the stories and "sagas", along with the image-formation (imagery) that accompanies them, are simply "suggestions", or "advice".
