Viviette Licence Form: Pennsylvania State of Pennsylvania Motor Vehicle Codes - Regulations - Online - Pennsylvania. Pennsylvania's Secret Driver's License for When You Die -. The Pennsylvania driver's license would be a "dying. License for driver's license will be an old woman who's passed away. by a state law "in force at the time.. Seemed to be a bit of a hodge podge: It said that when they left the driver's license. The license consisted of about three pages. A clear, white card showed the broad features of the head and shoulders; an image of the front, side, and back of each eye; and nine rows of numbers and letters. Between the eyes was the vast array of black bars that qualified a candidate as a legal blind person. Around the top was the personal data necessary for the issuance of a. A special clipper stood on the corner of each page, the top of which snipped two small scraps of paper, each cut in the same place, into tiny, even pieces. A device in the corner of each page turned a single-edged razor with a pointed blade, and the items were ready to be combined and used. Originally issued in the name of the beneficiary, a certified copy of the license gave the authority to the driver. Most drivers went through the experience simply, and gave a few clipped scraps of paper to some clerk at a nearby agency to make a new license. Others ignored the matter until a traffic ticket, or something else, caused the matter to re-emerge. Of course, a few went to a family member or friend, who would clip the copies into his pocket. The first to offer more than that was the blind person. He was usually not equipped to handle the job, but the editor gave him assistance. The process was much more a problem for him than for the driver. Carol believed she may have been less likely to be mugged, if she had the license to show her courage. The license, while being intimidating, might also not have been as effective a deterrent as she thought. If a car of criminals happened to come along while she was making the trip, they would know that a blind person was on the road. They would probably assume that Carol was blind, too.
